“Art is about beauty but sometimes it also has to act as a warning”. Philip Pullman

WHO CARES?

“The old adage, that whoever you vote for ‘the government gets in’, is patently true when you consider the failures of our electoral system. Worse still, the very idea that voting changes anything very much has created the image that with a little prompting and protest, somewhere, at an institutional level somewhere there, compromised, and unelected officials, who must be decent people! Will take care of everything. They won’t. They weren’t ever going to do so. So what do we do?

Greens are a puny force, in comparison to business and industrial lobby groups, and their governments. Indulging in a fantasy of benign paternalistic power, and inscrutable political processes is tragedy dressed up as farce.

The human tendency to deny what we don’t want to deal with and avoid the economic and environmental consequences of our personal actions is a far larger block to the progress of the evolution on humans. We must stop dreaming about an institutional response that will never materialise and start facing a crises that we’ve been warning about for decades, and believe in ourselves. No one in ‘power’ is willing to say, or do what is necessary.”

George Monbiot
