

THE APPROACHING SEA

Joe Moran, Professor of English and Cultural History, says that despite every generation's emphasis on change, "much of life for many people 'still consists of waiting for transport that never comes'". He describes his writing as "trying to find a critical language to talk about these empty, purposeless moments of daily life, filled with activities such as commuting, that we generally take for granted but that take up so much of our lives."

In the image here, Death says, with relish, that it's just how the "fuckers grind you down". So, whilst we wait for politicians to provide new meaning for and in our lives, the rain, the tide and a whole lot of climate chaos is arriving at the platform

Norwich Railway Station is not included in the 'Norwich 12'. Maybe it's not the building design that holds it back, maybe it's just the waiting, the ticket pricing and the catering that gives you that sinking feeling!!
